Psychological Science

The Department of Psychology at the University of North Texas (UNT) invites applications for a tenure-track faculty position at the Assistant or Associate Professor level to join the core faculty of the APA-accredited doctoral program in Clinical Psychology. We seek candidates with an active and potentially externally fundable program of research that complements the strengths of the current program faculty. Responsibilities will include maintaining a strong published research program, teaching undergraduate and/or graduate courses, mentoring graduate student research, and serving on departmental committees.

The UNT Department of Psychology has 27 FTE faculty members and over 1300 undergraduate majors. It includes two APA-accredited doctoral programs (Clinical Psychology, Counseling Psychology) as well as a Behavioral Science doctoral program. Our doctoral programs are distinct, though they function cooperatively and opportunities for collaborative research are numerous. The accredited doctoral programs are affiliated with the departmental Psychology Clinic, one of the largest University-based training clinics in the nation, which also provides many opportunities for research. The faculty members across the three doctoral programs engage in a wide range of research areas including, cognitive neuroscience, cross-cultural psychology, family and developmental psychology, forensic psychology, general and personality psychopathology, neuropsychology, trauma, psychotherapy, sport psychology, as well as research on cardiovascular functioning, diabetes, HIV/AIDS, psychoneuroimmunology, and sleep.

UNT is a Class I-Doctorate Granting institution located in Denton, Texas, part of the larger Dallas and Fort Worth Metropolitan area. UNT Denton is the flagship research campus of the UNT-System; it has over 38,000 students and more than 7,700 graduate students. With 103 Bachelor's, 86 Master's, and 38 Doctoral programs, UNT offers great opportunities for interdisciplinary and collaborative research. Both graduate and undergraduate students participate on faculty research teams. In addition, UNT takes pride in extensive community and 'town-gown' engagement. The region's racial/ethnic diversity affords substantive opportunities for scholars whose work is focused on the clinical needs of the community-at-large. Consequently, a documented commitment to and engagement with diversity in all its forms is expected. Current faculty evidence their commitment to diversity across their areas of research. To learn more about the programs' commitment to diversity, interested applicants are encouraged to visit the program's homepage at: <https://psychology.unt.edu/graduate-programs/clinical-psychology>

Substantial proportions of our majors (approximately 50%) and graduate students (approximately 30%) are from diverse race/ethnic backgrounds and UNT is imminently projected to become recognized as a Hispanic Serving Institution. As such, we are committed to increasing the numbers of our Faculty of Color. We have established formal and informal mentoring networks and processes by which every faculty member can succeed, feel supported, and find community.
